The Helen Ross McNabb Center serves approximately 1,600 children and adults annually through its clinic located in Sevierville. Many clients served are Gatlinburg residents and were affected by the wildfires which resulted in loss of life and property. At the onset of the disaster, Sevier County staff began contacting individuals and families served by the Center to ensure their safety and continued access to needed health care. The Center’s staff were also called upon to provide counseling support at emergency shelters and local schools. In addition to providing care and support to current clients and community partners, the Helen Ross McNabb Center received additional funding to help connect individuals in need to resources, like mental health care and housing. The Tennessee Housing Development Agency made an additional $25,000 available to the Center’s existing Emergency Solutions Grant program to provide emergency housing to individuals and families who lost their homes or were displaced due to the wildfires.

“This natural disaster not only affected Gatlinburg residents, but Sevier County as a whole,” stated Shellie Hall, director of Sevier County services. “Some of those who were employed in Gatlinburg lost their jobs as businesses burned. In addition, several housing units were destroyed, decreasing the availability of affordable housing in a community which was already experiencing an affordable housing shortage.”

To address mental health concerns and connect survivors to needed resources, the Tennessee Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services has funneled Federal Emergency Management Agency funding from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) to the Helen Ross McNabb Center. SAMHSA’s website describes the short-term disaster relief grant, awarded after a presidential disaster declaration, as providing community-based outreach, counseling, and other mental health services to survivors of natural and human-caused disasters. Services available to Gatlinburg residents affected by the wildfires include individual and group crisis counseling, community networking and support, basic supportive or educational contact, assessment, referral and resource linkage or development of distribution of educational materials. The outreach is referred to as the Sevier County Tennessee Recovery Project. For more information, call (865) 255-6716 or visit the Facebook page, www.facebook.com/strcp2017.

The Helen Ross McNabb Center and the community as a whole will continue to see the impact of the fires for months to come, if not longer. Many residents typically experience job and housing shortages during the tourism off-season, both of which create a greater need for mental health care in our community. In addition, people affected by natural disasters, like wildfires, may experience social isolation, difficulty sleeping, fear and severe anxiety as a result of the trauma they have faced. It is also common for people to feel intense anger, a sense of hopelessness or turn to substances to help cope with their symptoms. Experts also report an increase in suicide rates after an area has experienced a natural disaster. For these reasons, it is important for survivors of the Gatlinburg wildfires to understand the short-term and long-term impact their experience may have on their life and to know how to access the resources available to them. For more information or to connect with any of the mentioned resources, please call (865) 429-0557.
In November, the Helen Ross McNabb Center celebrated its new outpatient behavioral health services specifically designed to serve military personnel, veterans and their families. The formal celebration took place at the Center’s new facility located at 3712 Middlebrook Pike in Knoxville.

The Center’s mission of “improving the lives of the people it serves” led the organization to create specialized services for military personnel, veterans and their loved ones. These services are designed for individuals facing Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, depression, anxiety, substance abuse disorders, co-occurring disorders, thoughts of suicide and other invisible wounds incurred from service. The Center’s Military Services offer individual and family therapy, provided by clinical therapists trained in military culture. Many of the therapists are veterans themselves. The outpatient behavioral health services are available to anyone who has served in the military, regardless of discharge status or length of service. For more information, visit mcnabbcenter.org or call (865) 444-2333.

Due to generosity shown by the community, all services are free and confidential. The Center would like to thank Consolidated Nuclear Security, the Steenrod family and the Helen Ross McNabb Foundation for their generous support.

“Veterans’ issues are a major focus of CNS, which employs many veterans at Y-12 in Oak Ridge and Pantex in Amarillo, Texas,” said Jason Bohne, senior director of communications and public affairs. “CNS is honored to assist veterans and active military whose service helps keep America free.”

During the ceremony, the Center dedicated the building and Military Services in memory of Senior Airman Brandon Hall. He was a man of honor, loyalty and sacrifice. Declining a college football scholarship, he chose to serve six years in the U.S. Air Force (USAF), including four deployments to the Middle East. Brandon was stationed twice at Bagram Air Base in Afghanistan, an area of intense military activity. Not only did Brandon proudly serve during conflict, he continued his dedication by performing active duty in the USAF Honor Guard, a competitive volunteer position honoring and representing all members, past and present, of the Air Force. Brandon died in 2012 at the age of 26. The core values of the U.S. Air Force are “Integrity First;” “Service Before Self;” and “Excellence In All We Do.” While upholding these standards and this passion, the Helen Ross McNabb Center will assist and support East Tennessee military personnel and veterans in honor of Brandon’s sacrifice and dedication to his country.

“The transition from active duty to civilian life is misunderstood by those that haven’t served our armed forces,” said Mitch Steenrod. “In reality, it is a pivotal time for our veterans as they try to navigate from rigorous structure to a life that doesn’t possess defined boundaries.”
Tennessee Health Link launches, mental health case management eliminated

Over the last several months the Center prepared for the largest change in TennCare since the inception of the Medicaid waiver program in 1996. On Dec. 1, the Center’s leadership and clinical staff launched the new program known as Tennessee Health Link which offers care coordination for TennCare patients with behavioral health and physical health needs. This shift in health care delivery follows the national model of integrating care as the future of health care design. The Center, in joint efforts with our statewide association, continues to advocate for adequate reimbursement to ensure our patients have access to meaningful health care services. The evidence is consistent, community care (case management/care management), in conjunction with professional outpatient services, results in better outcomes for individuals with severe and persistent mental illness. McNabb Foundation secures Trinity grant to fund “A Shot at Life”

The Helen Ross McNabb Foundation secured the Trinity Health Foundation of East Tennessee grant to fund “A Shot at Life: Medication-Assisted Treatment.” Tennessee is experiencing a substance abuse epidemic that has led to devastating outcomes, touching all corners of our community. Approximately 45 percent of people who are incarcerated have substance use disorders and mental health conditions, representing a significant number of people in need of effective treatment for substance use disorders. Across the country, Medication-Assisted Treatment (MAT) programs targeting nonviolent offenders with opioid dependency disorders are reporting successful outcomes.

The Center will pilot a Vivitrol MAT program for repeat, nonviolent offenders in Knox County. The goal of the pilot is to provide substance abuse treatment for individuals affected by opioid substance use disorders to reduce recidivism and relapse rates. The project is anticipated to reduce the short-term and long-term costs associated with incarcerating individuals with untreated opioid substance use disorders in East Tennessee. The Center is collaborating with the Knox County District Attorney’s Office and Knox County Sheriff’s Office and will consult with the Knoxville Police Department. Funding from the Trinity Health Foundation grant will support MAT for 30 participants for up to one year of service to demonstrate MAT’s effectiveness and benefit to the community.

Rallying success at the Knoxville Challenger

The Knoxville Challenger, a USTA pro-circuit event, benefits the Center each year. Thank you to the wonderful sponsors, volunteers, players and officials that support the Knoxville Challenger. Because of these partners, more than $160,000 was raised to serve 26,000 children and adults in need.

McNabb Center spreads holiday cheer

For the past 15 years, the Center has provided holiday gifts for children and teens through the Dear Santa Program. This year, more than 1,500 children in need served by the Center and their siblings received donated gifts through the support of community sponsors, the Beth Haynes 12 Days of Christmas Online Auction and Chad and Robin Pennington’s 1st and 10 Foundation.

Photo on right: Chad Pennington gives an inspirational talk at the holiday shopping spree he and his wife, Robin, with 1st and 10 Foundation sponsored for McNabb adolescent residential clients.
